JANUARY, 2013

The President's Corner

2012 is now a year of memories.

How many EBC members accomplished cycling goals set on 01-01 2012?

Did the resolutions made last January bear fruit?

Over 100 riders took part in recording mileage for the year with 36% attaining the 500 mile standard

Six riders rode over 5,000 miles.

Four riders rode over 8,000 miles.

Bill Voegel (Pill Bill) rode over 12,000 miles and broke the previous record by nearly 3,000 miles!! Bill rode in over 375 rides to accomplish this feat.

EBC members participated in fifteen local bicycle or bicycle related advocacy efforts exposing over 2,500 persons (mostly youth) to bicycling safety and riding techniques.

Seven EBC members participated in and passed the first step in becoming licensed bicycle instructors with plans in early spring to take part in the second and final step.

Another successful Great Pumpkin Metric with over 850 riders, great rest stops, terrific pasta plus some wonderful foot tapping eclectic music.

But GuessWhat? Come Tuesday we all will have a chance to give it another try. When it comes to being a member of EBC there are many personal goals that can be accomplished:

—ride so many miles in a week, month or year.

—ride so many rides in a week, month or year.

—how about wrenching up the mph average a mile or two per ride.

—taking on RAIN (Ride Across Indiana) the 162 mile trek beginning in Terre Haute and finishing in Richmond.

—joining the EBC ten century club (ride ten centuries in a year--100 miles in one day).

—use your bike as your main mode of transportation (to work, to rides,etc.). Commuter mileage —volunteer to assist in one or more of the many advocacy programs to advance cycling sponsored by EBC.

A little over a week ago an email regarding Bylaw and Constitutional changes was sent to each member with an email address. In another section of this newsletter is a condensed version of the changes. Please read this over and give us your opinion.

I look forward to seeing you at the Annual Banquet/meeting on the 19th.

Cheers,

Parthur

SOMEWHERE BETWEEN HEAVEN AND HELL

Texas Hell Week isn't a ride I would have thought of doing on my own. My interest in the ride was generated primarily by Steve Gerbig who, with several of his RAAM cycling friends, used this in past years as an early season training camp. It's basically an eight day cycling event organized by Nick and Becky Gerlich of Ultra Sports Marketing. Now I've done my share of week long rides full of centuries (mostly TRIRI), but I always knew what to expect going into them, even the east coast ride in 2006, and never gave it a second thought. THW was different. I had never been to Texas before, much less the hill country portion, so I tried to learn what I could about the conditions I would face beforehand. Between the description on the THW web site, Steve's coaching and information from a co-worker that lived in the area for 20+ years, I knew that it was hilly (up to 20% grades), it can be hot (as much as 90 degrees) even in March, and the roads are not all that great for cycling as far as paved surface goes (mostly chip-and-seal). Nonetheless, I was ready for some adventure, so I was Lone Star state bound.

Prologue – Friday, March 10 – 1,040 mile drive

For anyone that has ever participated in a week long bicycle event or even a weekend out-of-town ride, you'll probably agree that the adventure starts long before your first pedal stroke, and even before you get in the vehicle to disembark for your point of departure. THW 2012 was no exception. Although Steve isn't riding RAAM this year, he was still planning on taking the RV down to Fredericksburg and doing a few weeks of riding and general site seeing, so he graciously invited me to stay with him for the week. I figured it couldn't be any worse than bunking with Dave Ashworth in a tent for a week on TRIRI, so no need to make lodging accommodations. Thanks Steve. My initial plan was simple. Drive down to Fredericksburg, TX on Friday, March 10, track down Steve at the RV park, get some sleep and start riding centuries everyday starting Saturday for the next 8 days. The Tuesday before I was to leave, Steve informs me that Joel Sothern (Steve's two time RAAM partner) would be competing in the Hill Country 600, a 370+ mile race just west of Fredericksburg. Steve was planning on driving the chase vehicle for Joel, but the length of the event meant night riding and the race regulations require two crew in the vehicle throughout the night, so I was being recruited to help out Saturday night. I didn't want to miss the first day of THW, so Steve and I agreed we would work out the details on how I could ride and still crew the race when I got down there. Club meeting Thursday night, Friday morning load up two bikes, throw all my gear for a week long excursion into the truck, fire up the GPS and head out from the house for Texas. About a mile from the house, I realize I forgot my helmet, so I turned back. By this time, it's already a little after 7:00am. The plan was to drive the 1,040 miles from Evansville to Fredericksburg in one day with stops only for gas. GPS indicated that it was about an 18+ hour drive and that I wouldn't arrive until around 1:30am Saturday; however, it always overestimates the time and I was sure I could probably make it there between 12:00am to 12:30am, if I didn't need to stop for a cat nap.

The drive down was surprisingly uneventful. I drove it straight with just three stops for gas. Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Oklahoma, and then Texas. Unfortunately, the Texas border is only about half way. Made it through Dallas unscathed and headed south, where I got held up on I-35 just outside Waco because of an accident, so I used the time to call home and chat with dear old mom. Traffic cleared and full speed ahead, the operative word being "speed". Texas interstate speeds are 75 to 80 mph, and their two and four lane highways are typically 65 to 70 mph – a little strange for night traveling. With about 1 hour of driving left, it didn't look as though I was going to need to stop for a rest, so I forged ahead to Fredericksburg. Drove into the RV park at 11:30pm (about 2 hours ahead of the GPS predicted time), but took nearly 10 minutes to find Steve's RV. Because Steve needed to be at Helotes, just outside of San Antonio, for the start of the Hill Country 600, I was on my own for the night, provided I could find where he hid the key to unlock the RV. By the time I got unpacked and settled in it was 1:00am. Caught a few hours of sleep listening to the light rain pitter-patter on the roof of the RV wondering if I would be starting THW off in the wet.

Act 1 – Saturday, March 10 – “LBJ Ramble” – 97 miles

Woke up around 6:00am Saturday morning and my question was answered – still raining, but only slightly. Although the ride wasn't to start until 9:00am, I needed to settle up a financial matter with the organizers and planned on starting early since I was to meet up with Steve in the afternoon and help support Joel in the Hill Country 600, so I rode in to the hotel where Hell Week was being headquartered to meet with Nick. Each morning he would have a short briefing on the days ride and the turn us loose. It was very informal. He indicated that because it was the first day and raining that there wouldn't probably be many riders that day. He told me there were very few hills on this route, cautioned me about the cattle guards, and wished me luck after which I took my first official pedal stroke of THW. For obvious reasons (multiple routes each day, length of routes, etc.) there were no Dan Henrys for the routes. Navigation was solely by cue sheets, so for the first time in many years I was going to have to use a cue sheet to find my way around the course each day. Since it was raining, I stuck the sheet in a plastic bag, strapped it to my forearm with rubber bands, and prayed I didn't get too lost in Texas. Despite the rain and need to concentrate on keeping track of the mileage between turns,

I tried to absorb the scenery as much as possible. Once you get outside of Fredericksburg it's essentially rangeland everywhere. Having never been to Texas before, the landscape was like nothing I had ever seen. The soil is loaded with rock, there are no tall tree forests (so no shade), and cactus, cattle and sheep everywhere. As the title of the days ride indicates, the route went through a portion of the Lyndon B. Johnson park outside of Fredericksburg. I couldn't take an opportunity to stop in the park since the rain was coming down harder at this time, although it appears to be a very well maintained facility with a number of interpretive educational features. I finished the route in the early afternoon, but had no time to relax afterward if I was going to make it to Junction in time to hook up with Steve and drive support for Joel in the Hill Country 600. After following Joel all night, you start to think that he is more machine than man – he never tires and never slows down. Long story short, riding through the rain most of the night, Joel wins the competition in the early dawn hours on Sunday morning in Helotes.

Act 2 – Sunday, March 11 – “Going to Camp” – 94 miles

By the time we loaded up at Helotes, grabbed a celebratory bite to eat and drove back to Fredericksburg, it was nearly noon and I had yet to ride the first mile of the scheduled route for Sunday, but still had enough time to finish before dark. The rest of the participants had long since departed three hours earlier, so I was on my own to handle navigation and the wind. The weather was clear, sunny and warm, and the route headed southwest of Fredericksburg to Camp Verde by way of Kerrville. After receiving riding instructions from a courteous Texas motorist (sarcasm intended) about not only staying left of the white line, but way left of the white line, I pushed on to the small town of Center Point at mile 59, the last place for support till the end of the ride. Luckily, it was tailwinds all the way to Fredericksburg and I had enough supplies to last the rest of the day. Steve was with Joel at Bandera for the Hilly Country 600 awards banquet, so I was on my own for dinner that evening. I still needed about 5-6 miles to get the full 100 miles for the day, so I grabbed a backpack and rode down to the local Super WalMart to stock up on some food supplies for the week. A quart of milk, some fruit, microwave dinners and some other odds and ends and I was ready to head back to the RV and call it a day. Packed it all in the backpack, strapped it on my back and started the 2+ mile trip back to the RV park. It was probably only about 15 pounds, but the entire trip back I asked myself how Sandy James ever toted that oversized Camelback everywhere she rode.

Act 3 – Monday, March 12 – “Comfort Zone” – 98 miles

Now that I have survived the hectic weekend of long drives, little sleep and late start times, I'm looking forward to a week of routine century riding, followed by dinner, some relaxing down time in the evening and as much sleep as I want for the next six days. Steve recovered from the weekend as well and decided to act as my tour guide for the day. For the first two days, I was able to survive with an 11-21 cassette, but luckily I realized I wouldn't be able to ride this type of terrain all week long without a more appropriate gear set-up, so the previous night I installed an 11-28 courtesy of Dave Ashworth. Today's route heads back south to Center Point, which is generally moderate climbing terrain. Nick named it “Comfort Zone” not because it is a relaxing ride, but because it follows to the south of Comfort, TX and that's where this ride becomes anything but comfortable. The name Skyline Drive should have been my first clue that this was going to be a painful ascent. I survived the climb, but Steve said he remembered a treacherous descent - and he wasn't kidding. It wasn't long, but it was steep and had a sharp turn at the bottom before another climb. After that, I was beginning to wonder if I was going to be able to ride off this hill or have to walk down. One more big descent and we were finally off the major portion of this mini-mountain. We hadn't stopped at Comfort and despite the great rural scenery, we were now desperate for a place to find something to drink. Luckily, the small general store at the crossroads community of Waring had exactly what we needed. A little further into the route (about 25 miles from the end) was a well placed stop at the Old Tunnel WMA, an old abandoned tunnel that now was home to a large population of bats. The lookout was constructed so visitors could watch the bats emerge each night as they went out to feed. Despite the big climbs and the warm temperatures, riding with Steve made for a great day. But the real highlight came after the ride when he introduced me to the homemade fruit smoothie. Truly, the nectar of champions. I'm convinced that if Steve had been making these for Lance Armstrong all those years in the Tour de France, he would not have had to resort to the use of illegal substances and would still have his titles. The ingredients in these are legal, aren't they Steve? But I digress. The evening is spent watching NCAA basketball playoff games, going over Steve's GPS data and generally reminiscing about RAAM and other cycling events.

Act 4 – Tuesday, March 13 – “Windows on Doss” – 105 miles

Today's route is primarily a large loop to the northwest out to the small community of Doss with a small loop to Luckenbach southeast of Fredricksburg at the end. Steve opted to just do a short ride today, so I venture out with the other cyclists, but few are riding the long “A” route. At the start of the ride, it was evident that it was sunny yesterday and that for many of the riders this was their first time out in the spring – a lot of sunburned calves. The cue sheet warning for the day at mile 21: “Possible water crossing!! This one is slippery!” It wasn't very long into the ride and I found myself fighting the wind solo. Doss and Luckenbach were the only places for support on today's route. Doss was 44 miles into the ride and by the time I arrived, I was overdue for a break and re-supply of water due to a second day of warm temperatures. I had my heart set on a cold Gatorade, or better yet a YooHoo. Doss is basically just a collection of a few homes, church and a store at the intersection of two range roads. The store caters mostly to the local ranchers needs, but I expected that it would have the usual convenience store offerings. I roll into the lot, lean my bike against the store, take off my shoes and proceed to enter through the front door only to find that the entire place is currently under renovation and they are not open for business in the interim. I was informed however, that I could get some water from the workshop building behind the store. While there, I noticed two other THW women cyclists that were trying to deal with the same misfortune. After downing a power bar and refilling my bottles it was off to Luckenbach, another 45 miles to the southeast. Luckenbach, as you might imagine is geared toward the tourist with several 1800's period buildings, including an outdoor concert venue. They had every libation know to man, except sports drinks. So following the adage “When in Rome...” I saddled up to the bar and ordered a Henry Weinhard's Root Beer. Thinking that this would likely be my best opportunity to pick up a trinket keepsake, I purchased a reasonably priced Luckenbach, TX hat pin, stuck it in my jersey pocket, mounted my stead, and headed back to the RV park at Fredricksburg. Following my debriefing of the days events with Steve, I emptied my jersey pockets only to discover no souvenir hat pin - Curses! Oh well, we were scheduled to ride back through there in two days, so I'd have another opportunity to replace it. Steve decided, no microwave dinners tonight, so he and I invaded downtown Fredricksburg and feasted on some well deserved German cuisine at the Auslander restaurant. Back to the RV for some more chit-chat and NCAA basketball, then prepare for the next day – another trip down to Comfort.
